Contents show] Supported features Edit Each release of Photoshop Elements is at least 12 months behind Photoshop. Photoshop Elements is based on the new Adobe Creative Suite 6. Photoshop Elements 11 is similar to Photoshop CS6. It is possible to upgrade from Photoshop Elements to Photoshop after a period of time. The different sections Edit The program can be configured through a dialog with multiple tabs (see main screen). Menu Edit Starting from Photoshop Elements 14.5, the user can add his own custom menus (the "Menu Edit.../Customize Menu" section) to customize the menu bar in the upper right of the screen. These menus are always visible by default; you can hide all of them by unchecking the "Menu bar" checkbox in the "Menu Edit..." section. Photoshop Elements has five custom menus, including: "Edit" is the first entry in the menu bar. This menu can be opened by clicking the flag icon in the top left of the screen. "Image" The default action for opening a new image file is to open it in the default application associated with the file extension. However, you can override this behavior by selecting the "open in" option from this menu. Alternatively, you can specify a different application to open files in. "Color" is the first entry in the "Image" menu. It contains all of the tools for modifying color in an image. "Edit Color" is the first entry in the "Color" menu. This is similar to the "Adjust Color" menu in Photoshop, and is described below. "Image Adjustments" is the first entry in the "Image" menu. This is the name of the menu in CS6. The older functionality is located in the "Image", "Adjust", and "Develop" sections. "Image Adjustments" is the first entry in the "Image" menu. This is similar to the "Image" menu in Photoshop, and is described below. The "Edit" menu has three options: "Undo", "Redo" and "Cut". This allows the user to undo/redo an editing action or cut a selection. This menu can be customized by selecting "Edit" from the "Tools" menu and then "Customize Menus" to create your own custom menus. Q: Do we have a generic "how should we handle duplicate content" question? Duplicate content has been discussed numerous times on MSO already. The main point however is that we should not blindly handle duplicate content as it may lead to inconsistent and hard to trace results. But although that is a clear rule of thumb, I do not know a clear general way to handle duplicate content or when and why it is harmful. What does our community think about handling duplicate content? A: Duplicate content should be handled like any other deleted content - without storing a content ID for all pieces of duplicated content. It should be either (1) deactivated, or (2) deleted. If it really is a duplicate of something that is not already on the site, then it should be deleted. If it is a duplicate of something that is on the site, then it should be deactivated. A: Definitely. I think it's fairly intuitive: We already have a pretty good set of guidelines to handle duplicate content (wiki), so those should be sufficient. If we do it "wrong" we get a duplicate question, which may eventually be closed and should probably be closed for the duplicate link. If we do it "right", it'll get help that way, rather than it simply being moved to askubuntu. Q: Como verificar o numero de dias a partir de uma datas no google api Por favor tentem me explicar, é possível verificar se algum dia de uma data existe na google api em java? j A: Utilize: `new java.text.SimpleDateFormat("yyyy-MM-dd'T'HH:mm:ss'Z'").format(data);` Baseado em: More Citing Sonoma County sex scandal, former US senator warns of 'regulatory capture' of courts SAN FRANCISCO, CA - JANUARY 15: U.S. Sen.
