Sold Out Exploring Space I'm also super excited to be a guest on this podcast, I spend a lot of time talking about space and all the crazy stuff that's happening. Who Should Buy This?: People who enjoy listening to podcasts and enjoy space topics. What We Should Cover in Episode #56: The Soyuz TMA rocket that is carrying the International Space Station crew. It's the vehicle that took the station crew home on May 12th. The docking with the station was flawless and it appears that a senior NASA official told the press that the station will still be kept flying for at least 5 more years. You can learn more about the docking of the station in this NASA TV video. You should also check out this Live ISS feed that was also streamed at the Johnson Space Center here. It's an excellent way to see what life is like on the station. You can see a few footage recorded by astronauts on the station here. One of the coolest things that you can do on the ISS is to participate in an experiment, there are more than 50 experiments that are currently running onboard the station and some are interesting, like this "Storytelling in Microgravity" experiment which studies how an artist's impressions of reality change in space. The space station has been visited by two private space carriers since the station was built in 1998, the Russian built Soyuz spacecraft and the American built Dragon. There are many other cool things that you can do in space but this episode will be a little shorter, I'll be back on the 20th with an episode that will be more focused on manned space flight and the future of NASA. Thanks for listening and I'll catch you on the flip side. The Chernobyl Consequences: A History of a Nuclear Disaster By Robert A. M.
