Photo: S.E.B. A documentary film crew in Pennsylvania has made a documentary short in the hope of clearing up some issues regarding the ongoing Penn State investigation. It's called What Sandusky Did. And, yes, it's about Sandusky. Sandusky, the son of famed former Penn State coach and athletics director Graham Sandusky, was convicted in 2012 of 45 counts of sexual abuse involving 10 boys. Recently, his wife, Barbara, had claimed that all of the abuse was consensual and that she did not understand "the magnitude of what I did and the effect it has had on my children and me." (Sandusky also faces a dozen charges of child rape in addition to his conviction.) The film crew behind the film, who had contacted Graham Sandusky before making this document, spoke to him over the phone and met with him and his wife in person. They also speak to two of Sandusky's victims and interview his son, a Penn State graduate student named Colin, who has spoken out on behalf of his father. It's the first time a son has said his father abused him. [How These Penn State Alumni Are Taking Action Against the State] And as they made their documentary, they asked Graham Sandusky about some of the other issues surrounding the case — namely the secrecy of some allegations and the way the university handled them. “They may have not moved with the speed that I would have expected them to,” he said in an interview with the Patriot-News. “If you look at who has been at the helm of the school in the last few years, Bob Scott was in charge
