Surely the other pets are the same thing. Tame them, and you will get a lot of benefits. You can feed them by standing in front of their dishes, and you will get meal costs. If they are hungry enough, they will show their hunger by emitting an ear-piercing cry. According to the skill groups you know, their attack power will be different. For example, you can attack monsters with low body strength by entering the sub-skill of the basic attack. But, as you increase your skills, your attack power will increase. So, you can't waste money to buy items that have no use when you can just buy more skill points. In addition to short rest skills, skill can be applied, depending on the type. Because of the difference of their length, you must use them wisely. For example, you must not use sword skills when you have farmed enough for the basic weapons. Using skills is also possible when you approach a monster. So if you want to avoid the hassle of disarming items, you can use a skill, and then you can put back items. Also, when you enter combat, the available skills will be shown. If you don't want to use the available skill, it will not be shown. It's so that you can quickly use skills that you need. After all, you want to fight with the best power possible. ----------------------------------- «Combat is not Real-Time.
