Note Don't confuse Photoshop Elements with the much more complete and powerful Photoshop. While Elements is an application that has many of the same functions as Photoshop, there are some major differences. Photoshop is the full-featured version of Photoshop. The comparison is between a true graphic-image creation program (Photoshop) and a simple graphics program (Elements).

The process chambers are often controlled by a central controller including one or more computers running processing code. The processing code controls the operation of the chambers, including control of parameters such as temperature, pressure and gas flow rate. The code also controls automation systems, including robotics systems such as wafer carriers, transfer chambers, metrology systems and others. Semiconductor manufacturing requires the process chambers to maintain very precise conditions to achieve uniformity across the die on the wafer, and to maintain the process time within acceptable limits. As the size of features has decreased, the size of the process chambers and their associated control systems has increased. This trend continues as the size of the devices being fabricated decreases, while the cost of the fabs remains relatively constant. Exemplary fabs are described in co-pending U.S. patent application Ser. Nos. 13/184

Pentraxin 3 in acute leukemia. Emerging evidence indicates that stem cell factor is a key molecular mediator of hematopoietic tissue repair. It is also known that acute myeloid leukemia (AML) patients show reduced stem cell factor expression and that this reduction is responsible for a defective stem cell function, critical for leukemic cell suppression. Finally, recent reports show that innate immunity, by cytokines and by pattern recognition receptors, has a pivotal role in the control of leukemia and immune tolerance. Pentraxin 3 (PTX3) is a pattern recognition receptor expressed in several tissues and organs, including the bone marrow, that binds to a conserved region in stem cell factor. Once bound to stem cell factor, PTX3 might act as a decoy receptor for stem cell factor, impairing stem cell function and differentiation. Herein, we review the expression and role of PTX3 in AML patients.

1. Technical Field This invention relates to a container, and more specifically to a container including a container body and a cap that closes the container body.

2. Background Art The patent literature contains many references of containers. Reference in particular is had to U.S. Pat. No. 5,282,775 by G. R. Wilkerson, III, et al. dated Feb. 1, 1994. In this reference, a rigid, generally rectangular cylindrical container is described in which an inner sleeve member is slid over an exterior end of the container body. The sleeve has flanges that extend from diametrically opposed sides of the sleeve so as to engage the outer surface of the body in order to secure the sleeve member to the body member. The flanges are then crimped or folded to secure the sleeve member to the body member. The sleeve may then be rotated to allow for easy removal of the container. Could you be more of a slut?! A girl had a nightmare that she was being raped and did not know what to do to save herself.
