This mask is often black and white, but you may be able to see the light past the mask for the highlights in your image. If you're starting from scratch, you should also have an idea of what you want to capture. Most photos we take today have far more than one layer. Typically a basic photo has three: exposure, shadows/midtones, and highlights/tints. If you're starting from scratch, you can simply have a single layer that's a solid color, such as black. Once you have a blank canvas, do a little color stretching, because colors "intimately" related to each other share space in our visual system. Colors that are energetically very different, such as blue and red, tend to be farther apart in our field of vision. How do I know how much space my image will use when I'm ready to print it?

While testing, we don't always take into account the actual final size of the print. It depends on the size of the image and the size of the paper. A photo on a small 5"×8" piece of paper is usually around 1"-3" × 4". If you are looking to print your image on a large canvas or poster, you will need to decide the final size of your image before beginning. 933d7f57e6
