Most of the interface changes in Photoshop CC 2018.2 can be customized by clicking on the 'gear' icon in the top right hand corner. I am a Photoshop Power user and it is has taken me to a new level of my workflow. Most of the Photoshop user interface can be customized now. I have added the Gear Icon in the bottom right to access those features. The changes that I have found are so useful and I wish I could put them all on a PDF. I wish Adobe would make these release ready for all Photoshop users including users of the 'zero' versions. The interface changes they have made are so useful to photographers. You just need to find out what they are under the 'gear' icon.

After making a few minor tweaks to recompose my photograph, I'm fairly pleased with the results. I'm particularly pleased with the subtle lighting changes it added - even though it didn't add a ton of contrast to the landscape. The original image doesn't have that much contrast or depth-of-field, so I was happy to see that it managed to still make an improvement. The auto action in Lightroom was rather basic. It wasn't sure which point in the three point selection process it wanted to pull, so I had to iterate a little. That's not a big deal, however, since it wasn't doing anything fancy that I couldn't have done. Auto pipeline inside Photoshop CC is extremely flawed. This is largely because the photographer can't manually adjust the output. The photographer can only make adjustments for the preview only. You cannot resize the canvas without having to scroll or pan the canvas.
